Southern Convict Life. The Atlanta Constitution publishes the report of Governor Colquitt to the Georgia Legislature on the fiendish torture which caused the death of Matthews, a State convict. The following is an extract:

"Soon after reaching Ball Ground camp we ascertained that Charles D. Phillips, jr., for some time past had been a section boss on the Marietta and North Georgia Railroad, and in that capacity controlled a number of the conviote. Among the number was a cortain con-Tonth, Ear and Mecdache, Frested Feet vies by the name of John Matthews, known in camp as John Massey. It could not be shown that he ate any dinner, but when the equad of convicts were on their way to the works from dinner one of the hands noticed that Matthews reeled as he walked. After reaching the works Matthews was assigned to his duty, which consisted in loading wheelbarrows; but according to the evidence of one of the gurds, he would, after gathering the dirt on his shovel, throw it into another shovel instead of the wheelbarrow, showing either obsticacy or that his strength had failed him and that his mind was wandering. Phillips saw this, and approaching him asked what he was putting the dirt in, and Matthews replied,

'I am putting it in the wheelbarrow.' Philips then struck him with the lash, again asking him where he was putting the dist.
